THE KANSAS HARD WHEAT MAN.

H. T. Lawlor, who claims the honor of having made Kansas hard wheat famous, has been manufacturing flour for half a century. The story of his achievement is told in "The San Francisco Argonaut" in his own words:

"I purchased 35,000 bushels of it from farmers in Ellsworth County, paying 35 cents a bushel for it. Other wheat at the time was selling for 85 and 75 cents. I shipped it to John W. Kaufman, at Berthelto, Ill., who made the flour. We guaranteed it to take the place of the best hard spring wheat flour and that it would bake by itself or blended with soft wheat. It soon spread, and the Northwest mills took hold and things changed, and Kansas hard wheat became known. But I found it in Central America as early as 1851, then known as Russian wheat. Lawlor lives in New Orleans."
